GETTING TO KNOW YOU

Doug Harris has served as the regulatory coordinator for the Department of Health since 1997. Doug began working for the Department in 1993 as a compliance officer in the safe drinking water program. Since then, he has worked in the office of the State Health Commissioner, serving in positions of increasing responsibility. Today, most of his time is taken up working as the commissioner's hearing officer, reviewing cases that arise under the department's regulatory programs, and facilitating the department's regulatory initiatives designed to protect the health of Virginians.

Before coming to state government, Doug received a B.A. from the University of Virginia and a J.D. from Washington & Lee University

School of Law and studied public administration at Virginia Commonwealth University. In the early 1990s, Doug practiced law in Richmond before recognizing his desire to enter public service. His claim to fame is trying his first jury trial . . . and winning it . . . on Friday the 13th.

Doug enjoys spending time with his wife of 15 years, talking about film with his older son (who followed him to the University of Virginia and has worked to arrange the Virginia Film Festival each of the last several years), watching his younger son play league football and basketball (and doing things with an Xbox Doug doesn't understand), and working on and driving his antique Alfa Romeo.
